I will find out from the media people what we have done to try to engage with the FT on this. Incidentally, you should be aware that Donovan has access to most of the emails written to and from Shell about him through his regular Data Protection Act requests.

Voices from the past.

If you look in the attached you will see that Mr Donovan has managed to get FT.com to refer to his website as if it was a respectable source.

This really irritates me and gives him undeserved credibility.

Has shell tried to do anything with the FT? If not or it has not worked I could have a go with

Best wishes,

Bob Dudley: can he fix it?

Bob Dudley, BP's 54-year old Mississippi-raised managing director for the Americas and Asia, looks likely to take over from Tony Hayward as chief executive. Mr Hayward lost the confidence of the US people and politicians after facing criticism for his handling of the explosion at the Deepwater Horizon rig and ensuing gusher, and his series of unfortunate public statements made matters worse. A day before the company announces its results for the first half of 2010, investors are expecting Mr Hayward to resign and the softly spoken American to step, in an attempt to ensure the survival of the company's future in [...]
